THE kind of man Garfield is in one of the most marked phases of his character, is illustrated in the following extract from his speech before the Ohio legislature up-nomination the Commercial declares:

Upon thorough investigation, we find that we can get along for a few weeks without pulp on the free list. The way toget the article is to take a buckeye log, grind it on a big stone and make your own pulp. 'Rah for Garfield, pulp or pulp.'

GARFIELD'S PLATFORM.

*"I want to say another thing. So far as 'I have studied the current of public thought and political feeling in this country, no feeling has shown itself more strongly than the tendency of the public mind in the past few months. The man who attempts to get up a political excitement in this country on the old sectional issues will find himself without a party and without support. The man who issues will find himself without a party and without support. The man who wants to serve his country must put him-self in the line of its leading thought, and that is the restoration of business, trade, commerce, industry, sound political econ-omy, and hard money, and honest pay-ment of all obligations, and the man who can add anything in the direction of the Garphille's name at the head of the Presidential ticket will awaken no hope of a "boom" in speculative shares; it will be honorably neglected by the bulls and and bears of the street alike; it will kindle no anticipation of subsidies for hazardous steamship ventures, or grants to railroads which private capital is alraid to touch, or "gigantic" canals across impracticable routes. The business men of the country will see in it a guaranty that nothing will be done to strain the credit of the Government for the sake of building up ventures which have no foundation in the needs of the country and nothing to promise the honest capitalist.

The Library Magazine, volume three is just received. It includes the six numbers from January to June, inclusive, of the current year, and is a snug pocket volume of 1,150 pages. Its variety covers a wide range of substantial matter, with none of the ascelled "light reading;" in freshness it excels, for its parts follow the reception of the latest foreign issues, with the rapidity which only steam typesetters can acquire; in breadth it is thoroughly catholic, knowing no "doxys" to foster, and no "lams" to shun. It finds room in single mouthly numbers for whole volumes as issued elsewhere, (for instance "The Manliness of Christ," by Thos. Hughes, and "The Light of Asia," by Arnold), and has plenty of space for all the cream, and the richest cream in all space. A novel offer is that which gives to be have the old and solded numbers bound. Price 10 cents per bound volume in cloth. American Book Exchange, Publishers, New York.

ments of the New York Sua in regard to General Garfield's connection with what is known as the De Golyer paving case in Washington City some years ago, we herewith append the following extract from the official testimony submitted before the appendix of the fore a House Committee of Congress, in February, 1879. Before this committee, General Garfield made the following statement of his connection with the case:

A day or two before the adjournment of the Congress which adjourned in the latter part of May or the first of June, 1872. Richard C. Parsons, who was a practicing lawyer in Cleveland, but was then the Marshal of the Supreme Court, and an old acquaintance of mine, came to my nouse and said that he was retained in a case on which he had spent a great deal of time, and that there was but one thing remaining to be done, to make a brief of the relative merits of a large number of wooden pavement; that the Board of Public Works had agreed that they would put down a certain amount of wooden pavement; that they would put down a certain amount of other kinds of pavement; that they had fixed the price at which they would put down each of the different kinds, and that the only thing remaining was to determine which was the best pavement of each of these several kinds. He said he should lose his fee unless the brief on the merits of these pavements was made, and that he was suddenly and necessarily called away home; and he should lose his fee unless the brought his paper to my honse and models of the pavement. I told him I could not look at the case until the end of the session.

When Congress adjourned I sat down to the case in the most open manner, as I the case in the most open manner, as I the case in the most open manner, as I stant resulted in the selection of J. H. Good, of Wheeling, and Wm. P.Tompson, of Parkersburg, as district delegates, and in the further selection of Robert McKlernent pavement, and several chemical analyses of the ingredients of the different pavements; I went over the whole ground carefully and thoroughly, and prepared a brief on the relative claims of these pavements for the consideration of the board. That was all I did. I had nothing to do with the terms of the contract; I knew nothing of its conditions, and I never had a word to say about the price of the pavement. I knew nothing about it; I simply made a brief upon the relative merits of the various patent pavements; and it no more occurred to me that the thing I was doing had relation to a ring, or to a body of men connected with longress, or related in any way to any of my duties in connection with the Committee on Appropriations, than it occurred to me that was interfering with your personal rights as a citizen. I prepared the brief and went home. Mr. Parsons subsequently sent me a portion of his own fee.

A year later, when the affairs of the District of Columbia came to be overhauled, Congress became satisfied that the government of the District had better be abolished, and this whole matter was very thoroughly investigated by a committee of the two Houses. They went into the question of the merits of this pavement, some claiming that it was bad, and some claiming that it was claiming that the government had paid too much for it, Mr. Chittenden was called as a winess I ought to say there had I of clock. is illustrated in the following extract from his speech before the Ohio legislature upon the occasion of his election as United States Senator:

I have represented for many years a district in Congress whose approbation I greatly desired; but though it may seem, perhaps, a little egotistical to say it, I yet desired still more the approbation of one person, and his name was Garfield. He is the only man that I am compelled to sleep with and eat with, and live with and die with and have bad companionship.

The Cincinnati Commercial has been every bitter in its criticisms of General Garfield, because he refused to put wood pulp, which enters into the manufacture of paper, upon the free list. Since his nomination the Commercial declares:

Upon thorough investigation, we find that we can get along for a few weeks without pulp on the free list. The way toget the article is to take a buckeye log, grind it on a big stone and make your own pulp. Rah for Garfield, pulp or upon the challenge of the conditional commenced was examined. When I heard that my name was being used in the matter, I went to the chair-man on both sides—for it was a joint comused in the matter, I went to the chairman on both sides—for it was a joint committee. Senator Thurman, of my own State, was on the committee; Mr. Jewett, now president of the Erie rallway, was on the committee. I said to the chairman that, if there was anything in connection with the case which reflected upon me, and they thought I ought to answer, I wently be obliged to them if they would inform me. The chairman on the part of the House, Mr. Wilson, said that he had looked the matter all over, and that what I had done was perfectly proper; but, if anything should occur to make any explanation necessary, I should appear before the committee; he would send me word. He never did send for me. Very soon after that, my political campaign in Ohio opened.

GAMFIRLD's very character is the prototype of republicanism. His humble birth and self-made manhood, his magnificent intellectual attainments, his large and impartial views of public policy, his private character, which partisan malice has never been able to smirch, and his unswerving and undoubted devotion to those great ideas for which, the Republican party exists, make him a candidate in whose support all the Republicans of the country will come together with a vigor and enthusiasm, such as marked the campaigns of 1874 and 1868.
